Excerpt: . . . passage of the national irrigation law is one of the great steps not only in the progress of the United States, but of all mankind. It is the beginning of an achievement so great that we hesitate to predict the outcome. That law provides for appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and territories to the construction of Irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands in those States. It may not be necessary to allocate land revenue in that way in Australia, where the system of pledging the national credit for carrying out all necessary public works is favoured; but it cannot be doubted that public opinion will compel State and Federal Governments to show increased activity in all measures calculated to promote settlement and attract Immigrants. Addressing the twelfth national irrigation congress in Texas President Roosevelt said: --I congratulate you because you are no longer striving for what seemed a distant hope. You are no longer engaged in a campaign of education. On the contrary, your first great object has been achieved. It was through your efforts, and those of men like you, that the people of the United States undertook to attack the desert. The way in which that campaign was conducted, and the glorious victories now being won, should be an inspiration to public men and enterprising producers in Australia. Dr. Collins in his New Agriculture says that irrigation has reduced agriculture in...
